I am enclosing a research report listing the sources I checked for your grandfather's family. As you can see, I did find some interesting items. Three of E. W.'s children (Gordon, William, and Jennie) married here between 1903 and 1908. Luckily the marriage records were fairly informative at that time. According to those records, E. W.'s name was Elisha Walter, and Louisa's maiden name was Beatty, Beathy, or Beady. W. W. was born in Boston Massachusetts or in Pennsylvania while Louisa was born in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada. The family must have moved often as the children were born in Hamilton, Ontario, and Buffalo NY.

Elisha died here in 1916. You could obtain a copy of his death certificate from the Vigo County Health Dept., Vital Statistics, 201 Cherry St., Terre Haute IN 47807. That should give the names of his parents, provided one of the children knew that information. There was an obituary in the Tribune, but it wasn't too helpful. However, it did say that he was buried in Highland Lawn Cemetery. You might contact them at 4520 Wabash Ave., Terre Haute IN 47803, to see if other family members are also buried there.

When I checked the Soundex to the 1900 Indiana census, I found a ten year old Elisha Corey in the Children's Home in Delaware county. No doubt he was your father. I also found 17 year old Gordon Corey living with a Kirk family in Delaware county. I assumed that Louisa died before 1900 and soon found her in the index to the Delaware county death records. You could get her death certificate from the Delaware County Health Dept., 100 W. Main, Muncie IN 47305. You might also write the Beech Grove Cemetery, 353 W. Kilgore St., Muncie IN 47305, to see if she was buried there.

There is a genealogical query column in the local newspaper, and you might be able to get in touch with other Corey descendants through it. The address is: Genealogy, Terre Haute Tribune-Star, P.O. Box 149, Terre Haute IN 47808.

If you would like copies of any of the items on the research report, our charge is 15¢ per page, plus postage.

Funeral of the Late S. Cory.

Yesterday afternoon occurred the funeral of the late Simeon Cory. The services were held at the residence, corner Oak and Fourth streets. Rev. Wm. Graham, now of Valparaiso, Ind., officiated, assisted by Rev. Pavy and Rev. Darwood. The residence and the ground in front of the house were crowded with friends and citizens.

The Davis family first sang the hymn "Olivet," which was a favorite one with the deceased. Mr. Graham then delivered a plain, simple discourse, full of sympathy and encouragement toward the large family left without a head, and expressive of comfort in a well grounded hope. At the conclusion of the address Mr. Graham read an obituary, which will be found below.

Dr. Philander Wiley, of Asbury university, a former friend of Mr. Cory, then spoke briefly of his old acquaintance with the deceased. His words were touching and earnest.

After the singing of another hymn by the Davis family, the friends were allowed to view the remains. The casket was beautifully decorated with flowers. Among the decorations was a floral anchor; also a sickle and sheaf of wheat, the gift of Mrs. G. C. Duy, prepared by the Heins.

The Masonic order then conducted a service, after which the funeral cortege proceeded to the cemetery, the procession being very long, composed of our representative citizens. The burial services of the Masons and the Odd Fellows were held at the grove.

Following is the obituary prepared by the Rev. Wm. Graham:

MEMOIR.

Simeon Cory was born in Morristown, New Jersey, December 30, 1818, and died at his residence in Terre Haute, December 2, 1877. His parents removed to Honesdale, Pennsylvania, when he was only eight years of age. At the age of nineteen years he came to Terre Haute on a visit, and was so much pleased with the place that he returned home only to prepare for making his permanent residence here; so that he has been a citizen of Terre Haute since 1837, a period of forty years. Mr. Cory was a religious man all his life; his parents were staunch members of the Presbyterian church, and he dated his conversion at the age of sixteen years, when he attached himself to the church of his parents. When he came to Terre Haute he found no church of his early choice here, and, unwilling to live without a profession of religion, he united himself with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he continued an honored member until the time of his death. Mr. Cory was twice married, first to Miss Sarah Sasseen, of whom he has six children living; and after her death he married Mrs. Mary E. Gauze, of whom he has four children, in all ten living children. To all these children his now bereaved wife has been a most tender and affectionate mother, ever devoted to their interest without the least partiality.

It is a delicate task to speak of the dead when they have been as well known as Mr. Cory has been in this community. From my intimate acquaintance of the man for more than ten years, I know that an eulogy of his character or life would by no means meet his approval, and no such attempt is intended by these notes; yet so prominent and useful a citizen as he was should not pass away without some memorial utterances.

Simeon Cory was a man of marked integrity. He was always himself, and could be distinguished from all other men. He was independent in his views, without giving himself much trouble whether they coincided with the popular favor or not. He had deep and strong convictions of his own, and on these convictions he acted with an honest and sincere purpose of doing right. Himself honest and upright in all his transactions, he was a friend to all men.

these qualities of character. He despised a mean act, and expressed his indignation with an outrightness that admitted of no apology. He was always frank and candid; what he was in character he showed in every-day life. In him there was not the least approach to concealment or hypocrisy. He was honest and straightforward in all his dealings, and expected others to deal with him in the same way. No one will rise up and say that he at any time intentionally wronged him. He was what poets have called "the noblest work of God," an honest man.

In the character and habits of Mr. Cory were the elements of success. His industry, energy, and stability were sure to succeed. He allowed himself but little time for relaxation from business, perhaps too little; his energy did not put on the character of confusion, but of steady force; he was deliberate and cool, but steadily persistent. As a rule, he confined himself to the one branch of business he had in hand; did not deal in uncertain speculations and risks, but went forward with uniform method and regularity. He lived on the fruit of his own toil, and business men lost nothing by his extravagances or misrepresentations. He was a solid man.

Brother Cory was by no means a selfish man; he lived not for himself, but for his family, for society, for the church, and for God. He was enterprising in public improvements, and benevolent in helping the needy. I can speak from personal knowledge when I say that he was always ready to help the needy; his heart responded with tender sympathy for suffering humanity, and his hand was ever open to relieve their wants. The church, however, was his chosen field for benevolence; and the world will never know the good he has done. His benevolence was not impulsiveness, grandly great at one time, and then sinking to insignificance, like the ebbs and flows of the tide; it was the noiseless ceaseless flow from a warm heart of generous sympathies. In what benevolent and religious enterprise of his day has he no capital? Looking over memoranda of past years, the other day, the name of Simeon Cory was ever occurring among the first, if not the first, in all the liberal contributions. His capital, the product of an active, useful life, is in the endowment of colleges, preachers' aid societies, Christian missions in home and foreign countries, and church buildings from one end of the continent to the other. It is no disparagement to others, when I say that to his influence and liberality, very largely, is due the Centenary church enterprise of this city. He was associated in counsel with me in every measure that instated that enterprise. His judgment determined the location, and he negotiated for the ground on which the buildings stand. Such a man will be missed, greatly missed especially by his church.

Mr. Cory was a warm personal friend. The friendships he formed were deep and abiding. He never refused a favor when it was in his power to grant it. He entered into matters of friendship as he did in the affairs of business, not in demonstrations, but in steady unflinching devotion. I have known him to leave his home in the night, when the banks were inaccessible, and go to his store and unlock his safe that he might relieve a friend. Time and again, after the business hours of the day were over, would he make his way to the home of his pastor, to give him a word of cheer before he went to his own family. How green and sweet are the memories of such a friend!

In his religious character brother Cory was not showy nor demonstrative, but solid, consistent and reliable. The appreciation in which he was held by his church is shown by the fact that he was always held responsible offices, often two and three at a time, and no trust ever suffered in his hands, either from negligence or incapacity; he was a "good and faithful servant." Modest and retired as was his piety, it was deep and fervent. No one was more regularly in his pew than was he. In his last illness he expressed himself as desiring to live long, so that he saw much to live for; he wished to do more still for his family, for the church and for the world. He was no misanthropic faultfinder; this was a bright world to him, because he enjoyed the conscious approval of God, and he appreciated life's favors. To him death had nothing alarming; he expressed himself as ready and prepared for that change, and he was calm, peaceful and trustful. Only God's saving grace can enable a person to look thoughtfully into the future world with hope and pleasure, and such was his view of the future.

Of his domestic relations, it does not become us to speak, except in general terms. The shrine of the domestic sanctuary is too sacred for outside gaze. These kindred hearts meet and blend into union akin to heaven. That he was all which is expressed by the phrases Christian husband and Christian father, is about all we need say. Tender and considerate, it was his pleasure to make all the members of his numerous household happy. In their pleasures and joys, he showed almost childish delight. There was always sunlight in that household; the refining influences of our holy Christianity sweetened and gladdened that sacred retreat. Such was our departed friend and brother. We do not claim that he was perfect; no mortal is perfect; but his was a well rounded character and life.

In conclusion: In the death of Simeon Cory the country has lost a loyal citizen, the community a leading, honorable business man, society a benefactor, the church a strong pillar, and his family an affectionate husband and father.

BEACH—This morning at 7:30 o'clock, Addie C. Beach, wife of Silas C. Beach. Further notice of the funeral will be given.

JOAB—At 10 o'clock on Monday evening, March 31st, 1879, Mrs. Nettie Boore Joab, wife of M. M. Joab.

The funeral will take place from her late residence corner of Twelfth and Chestnut streets on Wednesday P. M. at 3 o'clock. Friends are invited to attend without further notice.

MARCH 31 1879

MRS. ADDIE C. BEACH.

This morning about eight o'clock, Mrs. Addie C. Beach, wife of Mr. Silas Beach, contractor, died suddenly at her residence on north Ninth street. The deceased has been consumptive for a number of years, but for the past few days was considered better. She was out riding last Thursday, and yesterday and was in quite good health and spirits. She was not considered to be in danger at all this morning when Mr. Beach left to attend to business, but he was soon called back to witness her death.

Mrs. Beach was a daughter of Mr. Nelson Conn, well known for a great many years in this city. She was beloved of a large circle of friends.

MRS. NETTIE BOORE JOAB.

Last night at ten o'clock one of the most estimable of women passed early in life to her reward in Heaven. The deceased was wife of Mr. M. M. Joab, attorney, and has been unwell for a long time.

To the lovely graces of an affectionate wife and devoted friend Mrs. Joab united the accomplishments of a cultured lady. She was zealous and active in all she undertook. Her literary merit was of a high order and as an amateur reader she won the praises of all who heard her. Her loss is not alone to her husband, relatives and immediate friends but to the entire community which honored and respected her.

DEATH OF REBECCA ARBUCKLE.

Mrs. Rebecca Arbuckle, wife of Mr. Geo. Arbuckle, late of this place, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Lampham, Seeleyville, Ind., on Sabbath afternoon, the 23d inst., and was buried from her late residence in this city, Monday 23d inst. She had lived 61 years, 4 months and 9 day, having been married over 42 years. She leaves a husband, two daughters and two sons to mourn her loss. Mrs. Arbuckle was one of those sensitive, retiring, sweet spirited natures, that quietly walk the earth with an almost visible halo resting upon the tranquil brow. Of a high courage, and supreme patience, she bravely bore afflictions that would have crushed others less enduring. Utterly self sacrificing, she would deny her own infirmities in order that those she loved might not be pained. Devoted to her home, she spent her life in serving the interests of her family in rearing and caring for her children. The last words under her dying lips, were blessings upon the heads of her daughters, and a prayer for her sons. So she passed; the most loving and faithful of mothers. Being an invalid almost her entire life, in Paris, she formed comparatively few acquaintances, made few friends; but those who knew her well, clung to her with the devotion of an unusual friendship. She was brought up in the Presbyterian church, though never uniting with any church. To Mr. Wilkin—who was called to visit her a few days prior to her death, she expressed faith in the atonement of Christ, and resignation to the will of God. Her mind was at rest, and later, she urged her weeping friends to "pray the Father to come quickly," so she passed away declaring she was "only tired," wanting to rest. As they bore her out almost covered with flowers by loving hands, we felt how gently God had given her rest in the sweet sleep of death.

"Sleep softly beloved, we sometimes say,
But have no power to charm away
Bad dreams, that through the eye-lids creep,
But never doleful dream, again,
Shall break this happy slumber, when
He giveth His beloved sleep."
—[Paris Gazette.

HENRY WINTER DAVIS.

With profound sorrow we have to announce the death of HENRY WINTER DAVIS, one of the brightest intellects in America, at a time of life when those who knew him thought a distinguished career yet before him. He was one of the most brilliant orators and parliamentary debaters the country has ever produced, and these qualities were sustained by faculties of close logical reasoning, thorough knowledge of constitutional law, clear headed statesmanship, and perfect boldness in declaring and maintaining his conscientious convictions. He was also a man of fine literary culture. During the rebellion Mr. Davis was one of the staunchest defenders of the National Government in Maryland, and one of the leaders of the Union party in the fierce conflict in that State. As such he was a peculiar object of rebel hate.

Mr. Davis was born in 1817, in Annapolis and educated at Hampden Sidney College. He served two terms in Congress before the war, and in 1863 was elected again. He was uncompromising in his political course, and scorned concessions to what he believed weakness or error, or to power, or to use the arts of popularity. His parliamentary speeches are entitled to take rank in the annals of the country during the civil war, with those of Cowin in his Congressional career. He lived where he realized the deadly nature of the Southern rebellion, and he was for radical treatment of it. He died country, but not till he had among the foremost statesmen national preservation and rework he believed should be

Dear Mrs. Merrill:

I was recently given a page from your Tribune-Star dated Sunday March 25, 1973. It was an article headlined "Cory Story Presented by Mrs. Thomas".

I know the busy day of a librarian can become hectic, but is it at all possible for you to take time sometime and give me any information from the Cory Story book?

I have been working on a Cory family history which I have taken back to 1611. I would be most interested in names mentioned in the book. My husband's great uncle, James Enos Cory, attended Cory reunions in Indiana. The town I do not know. James Enos died in the early 1920's.

In my files I have a very faded copy of a reunion he attended. I do not know where this reunion was held, but it looks like the word could be Morado Park, but no town is given. Attending the reunion were Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton of Oaklandon, Ind., Mrs. Anna (Cory) Lynch of the same town; Mrs. Edith L. (Cory) Beckley of Ingalls, Indiana. I don't think these towns are near your county.

My main purpose of the letter is to find out names mentioned in the book and if you know of any relatives still living in the town of Cory, Indiana who are descendants of the name Cory. Maybe I am getting the "cart before the horse" in assuming the town Cory was started by the family Cory.

Our Cory family starts with a John Cory born in England in 1618, followed by three more John's, then Abner, Aaron, Thomas and then to my husband's immediate family. I have all the names of the children of the above men, but have only extended to greater length from my husband's great grandfather to the present date. I have interest now in picking up descendants before his great grandfather. Any time I see or hear of the name Cory, I investigate, sometimes to no avail.

Mrs. Alfred W. Thomas who wrote the history of Cory, Indiana - is she a native of the town? Was she Cory related? I am again assuming the town was started by the Cory family.

Whatever your time avails, I would really appreciate hearing from you.

Thank you so much,

Dear Mrs. Cory:

I looked in the Cory book as you requested, but the only information it included was the statement that "the village was named for Simeon Cory, a pioneer and popular merchant at Terre Haute, who, in recognition of the honor, volunteered to put in a town pump and build a schoolhouse. The well was dug and a wooden pump installed, but Mr. Cory became ill and died before a schoolhouse could be built."

I found nothing more about the Cory family except the references I copied from the Cemetery Records of Vigo County and the Old Settlers Association of the Wabash Valley, 1875-1885." These pages I am enclosing.

In the Census of 1820 for the whole state of Indiana, I found Isaac Cory. He was living at that time in Franklin County, Indiana, and his household was listed as having four members.

Since the Simeon Cory family came from New Jersey, I looked in the volume of Records of Officers and Men of New Jersey in Wars, 1791 - 1815". I found the following names listed in the index: Clement R. Cory, p114; Joseph Cory, p65; David Cory, p22; Samuel Cory, p95.

I shall look for an obituary of Simeon Cory in the local newspaper, and if I can find it, will include a copy in this letter.

I hope that the information included may be of some help to you.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth R. Merrill
